After the funeral, a man visited the widow – she angrily dismissed him. Go back over 50 years to the day when Florentino Ariza, a telegraph boy, falls in love with Fermina Daza, the daughter of a mule trader. Ariza is persistent, writing to him constantly, serenading, speaking poetically of love. The father tries to separate them, and then one day she sees this love as an illusion. She soon married Urbino, a cultured doctor, and for years, Ariza carries a torch, finding solace in the arms of the women, loving none. After the fall of Urbino, are Ariza's hopes illusory? Reviewed by 3/10 I never read the book, I'm a reader of reading more, I did not have any idea what I was involving when I watched in a movie festivals display in this movie. It is not difficult to imagine that the book sustain has a romantic experience narrating the love of man woman spanning decades, it's also not hard understanding why you would want to take this story and turn it into a movie.What is hard to do is sit through it.There is obviously a lot of hard work and craftsman ship on display. Whatever the budget was, most of it made it to the screen cÃ3lera which cannot be said for most productions. However, it's never clear what the tone is, is this a comedy or a drama? Films can have it both ways and win, but here it seems to be they shot it two ways and weren't sure which way to gocÃ3lera;Aso they did both. Bardem's character, Florentino, seems to go between being Chaplin and Norman Bates with his bowler's cap & comedic reactions on the one hand and his obsession with his crazy mother who arranges trysts for him on the other. His character at times seems to be brilliant and charming, and at others borderline mentally retarded.Complicating matters here, Florentino is played by two actors, Unax Ugalde as a teen and Bardem later in life. The choice to swap out the Ugalde for Bardem comes at a strange point in the story, it's when Fermina, the love interest, has not seen him in sometime. This might sound like the perfect point to swap out, but with Fermina played by the beautiful Giovanna Mezzogiorno though most of the film, it's confusing when Bardem steps in now as Florentino. It is here that the Fermina dumps Florentino with really no explanation, but most will feel for her decision as in a span of time that has not touched her...he as aged horrifically! And on top of that, this old man before her seems to be firing on a few lost cylinders. Is this a boy in love, or a psychotic about to rampage? You be the judge. Stalker.For his time on screen as Florentino, Ugalde is saddled with a prosthetic nose hoisted upon him to resemble Bardem. This is a HUGE mistake, as is, frankly ALL the make-up in this film which could single handedly be the death blow to the film because it is uniformly so bad that for most of the presentation you simply cannot Your eyes out of it. That fake nose, that false and mezzogyron beard in the 70's, it does not look like a day with over 30 years. book. Part of what makes the adaptation difficult is knowledge of what to leave out and, in some cases, what to add! Here you are treated with such information, so many places (and a lot of frighteningly bad makeup) the "romance" is left to wolves. When Florentino and Fermina finally re -be herself at the end of the movie, it is a sake, to be them together, but to think that the movie will be over soon ... but it is not. This continues now that he must conquer it! This movie is full of good intentions ... and we know where this is sometimes going to take you. Bardem is lucky that no old men for old men opens this week, then who took this colombian train accident can take bad taste from the mouth. mouth.
